INTRODUCTION

WorkPlace Big Five Profile™ Consultant's Report

The Consultant's Report is intended to support the Consultant in his/her interpretation of the WorkPlace Big Five Profile™ Trait Report and the Trait Capacitor Report. It provides additional information on Trait Variance, Response Set Bias, Item Responses, and the recommended HRO strategy for the Trait Capacity Scores. The information can help you consider more detailed aspects of the individual's trait scores and gauge their behavioral imprint with more precision. It will also help you identify key discussion points that help individuals gain deeper insights from their WorkPlace reports and support more robust debrief sessions. The insights can also be used to design action plans that fit the individual's natural style and provide input for target interviewing.

How to Use This Report

The first section contains Trait Variance indices for the 5 Supertraits and 23 Subtraits. They describe the degree to which an individual's behaviors are stable or somewhat flexible according to context. The second section indicates whether there is Evidence of Response Set Bias. Most of the time this will say "None." If you see any of the other possible descriptions, please refer to the Professional Manual for guidance before interpreting the WorkPlace reports with the individual. The third section contains the individual's item responses for each question in the assessment. These can be used along with Appendix A in the Professional Manual if the individual would like to discuss a particular score in detail. Finally, if an individual receives a Trait Capacitor Report, there will be a third section included in the Consultant's Report that contains the summary of their Trait Capacity Scores for competencies. You will find the Human Resource Optimization (HRO) Strategy for each competency measured, based on the Trait Capacity Score and on performance levels for each competency. For further information on any of these sections, please refer to the WorkPlace Big Five Profile™ Professional Manual.

NOTE: Trait Variance reflects the degree to which the answers to all items for a given trait are highly similar ("Consistent"), somewhat varied ("Situational"), or highly varied and including both extremes ("Flexible").

EVIDENCE OF RESPONSE SET BIAS: Tendency to Disagree, Tendency to Use Extremes, Tendency to Use a Response Category Repeatedly

Tendency to Disagree ("nay-saying"). This response set occurs when the respondent disagrees or strongly disagrees with 44 or more of the 93 items. Approximately 1% of the norm group disagree to that extent.

Tendency to Use Extremes ("all-or-nothing-saying"). This response set occurs when the respondent strongly agrees or strongly disagrees (the two extreme options) with 61 or more of the 93 items. Approximately 1% of the norm group select these extreme outside positions to that extent.

Tendency to Use a Response Category Repeatedly ("stuck-in-a-rut-saying"). This response set occurs when the respondent selects the same option for 55 or more of the 93 items (60% of the assessment; approximately 1% respondents), has a tendency to repeat the same response for consecutive items (approximately 1% of respondents), or selects the same response for 10 or more items in a row (approximately 1% of respondents).
